Paper Software Brings Contract Tools to the Legal Industry

New application provides a one-stop shop for contract creation and analysis

NEW YORK, August 3, 2016 – Paper Software, developers of powerful software applications for creating and analyzing contracts, today announces the launch of Contract Tools, a Microsoft Word add-in for streamlining contract creation and analysis that promises to help lawyers and other professionals work more efficiently.

Contract Tools, soft launched to the industry in February, offers a variety of features, including:

- Tools for working with contractual provisions, defined terms, to-dos, and more.
- Automatic proofreading for common contract drafting problems.
- Automatic completion of important words and phrases.
- Enhanced search features for finding time, money, and other important deal terms.

"We developed Contract Tools knowing that lawyers and other professionals who deal with contracts and the like need something to help them work more efficiently," says Ben Whetsell, co-founder of Paper Software. "We understand that people who work with legal documents want all the essential information at their fingertips – and we have heard from many of our users that Contract Tools does exactly that and is the solution they have been looking for."

"The best part," adds Whetsell, "is that the entire process (including proofreading) typically takes only two or three seconds, versus a few hours to do everything manually. We are thrilled to be officially launching the product to the legal market."

Contract Tools is the companion to Turner, a Mac-only contract drafting application that the company released in September 2015.

About Paper Software

Paper Software (papersoftware.com) was founded in 2010 when brothers Benjamin Whetsell, a lawyer, and Nathan Whetsell, a computer engineer, saw a need to streamline contract creation and analysis. The company has developed Turner for Mac and Contract Tools for Windows PCs, both powerful tools for creating and analyzing contracts.
